[MULTIPLE NAMES LISTED]

122. The law provides in a death penalty case that a jury shall consider any "mitigating factors" when determining whether to recommend the death penalty. "Mitigating factors" are those facts that suggest that some punishment less than the death penalty is sufficient to do justice with respect to a particular defendant and a particular offense. The weight to be given to any "mitigating factor" is left to each juror individually.

Your may be asked to consider one or more the following as "mitigating factors", in addition to others:

- a. the defendant's youth at the time of the offense
- b. the difficult circumstances of his upbringing
- c. any child abuse the defendant may have sustained
- d. the defendant's potential for rehabilitation
- e. the good behavior or good works of the defendant in the past
- f. the good behavior of the defendant while incarcerated
- g. the defendant's character
- h. the defendant's emotional and mental state

If you would refuse, under any and all circumstances, to give any consideration to any of the listed factors, please circle that factor.
